

Le nom qui efface la couleur

Israel Ariño

Sylvie Durbec

Israel Ariño sees in black and white. His work evokes a vision that is dear to him : the disappearance and fugitive traces resulting inaccessible to our rationality. The tools with which he body , medium format and view cameras induce a slow practice photography, through which he sees ajar and the edges of the world. His images build one as well as original contemporary decor metaphorical : faces, landscapes, animals , clouds . These various objects provide the missing pieces to the mystical puzzle that continues and it builds throughout his wanderings intuitive . He must be captivated by his subject to extract our everyday environment that pieta , these aquatic silhouettes, these kids who look tomorrow and defy anyone to stop them, these paths go, these black holes to erect tarps sky and adorned with dew for us to be kind, these hearts nestled in the wasteland , the inextricable rubs the ridiculous and yet everything makes sense and a meaning beyond the age of men and yet reminds us of our own humanity , instead that we take and that we leave . Le nom qui efface la couleur is neither a statement nor a symptom of a disappearing world , we would have lost . It was better before not over here .
